

Terminating a Guernsey commercial lease early

Insights - 20/02/2019

We want to renew the lease of our shop, but is there a way we can terminate the lease if we see a drop in business?

On renewal the landlord may agree to give you a right to break the lease at a particular time, or if sufficient notice is given - called a 'break clause'. You would have to give some thought to what would be a suitable break date or notice period - for example, 2 years after renewal or on giving, say, 12 months' notice.

It would be possible to make a break clause conditional upon a downturn in business, but that would necessitate you opening your accounts to the landlord, and you may each have differing ideas of how much downturn in business has to be shown before you can exercise the break. A provision such as that would require careful wording and is therefore rare.

Your landlord may require that the break is conditional upon you satisfying certain conditions, and if you don't comply with those conditions you would lose the right to terminate the lease. An example would be that you are not in breach of any of the terms of the lease. From your perspective that could be quite an onerous condition because even a minor breach could jeopardise the right to break.

An ideal break clause for you will be completely unconditional, but the landlord is unlikely to agree to such a clause. A good compromise is a condition that the rent is paid up to date and that there are no subsisting underleases.

If you exercise a break you would want to ensure that the landlord refunds you any rent paid in respect of the period after the break date.

You should bear in mind that time is usually of the essence in relation to notice periods in a break clause. This means that if you didn't give the requisite notice you would lose the right to exercise the break.

About Ogier

Ogier is a professional services firm with the knowledge and expertise to handle the most demanding and complex transactions and provide expert, efficient and cost-effective services to all our clients. We regularly win awards for the quality of our client service, our work and our people.

Disclaimer

This client briefing has been prepared for clients and professional associates of Ogier. The information and expressions of opinion which it contains are not intended to be a comprehensive study or to provide legal advice and should not be treated as a substitute for specific advice concerning individual situations.

Regulatory information can be found under Legal Notice

Meet the Author

Martín Casas

Senior Associate

London

Guernsey

E: martin.casas@ogier.com

T: +44 1481 752214

Related Services

Channel Islands Local Legal Services

Property law

Legal